Paragraph 3 should read

3. To this end, the General Assembly, at its special session, should emphasize the importance of studying the existing facilities and mechanisms for the promotion of peace, and possible ways in which the United Nations capacity might be strengthened and Member States encouraged and assisted to fulfill their Charter obligations. There are three major areas of concern: these are the related subjects of crisis anticipation, peaceful settlement of disputes and peace-keeping. The special session should call for further and intensified efforts in these major areas in those organs of the United Nations system in which such studies are being pursued, and the Assembly should give consideration to the adequacy of existing studies with a view to supplementing them, as necessary.
